The beautiful nature of Bokeh is a clear reflection of its exterior – it's subtly quiet, soft, and smooth. The best way to describe the effect is that it produces stunning, pleasing blur — camera's subject is blurred more completely than it was in reality, and the aperture is sufficient to do this. Bokeh helps to create shots with a rich and soft look that look like works of art. It is easier to shoot to create beautiful pictures. There are a number of ways to create great Bokeh. The simplest of all is using natural objects. The shapes of an object which is illuminated by light are visible to the camera. To obtain the best possible softness, you should know how to get the best angle of light. You should focus on the brightest part of the image, so it gives light evenly. Moreover, you can filter out reflections and bright areas on the object, so the object appears only in the back focus. No matter what equipment you are using, you can still create a beautiful Bokeh effect. If you want to do this you will need to focus, focus, and focus some more. Use appropriate angle You have several options to obtain the best angle. You can move the camera to get more depth in the scene. It is also possible to move the object up, on its side, or up and down. You should also use a slow shutter speed, so the light passing through the camera may take longer to hit the sensor. The lower the shutter speed, the more light is captured, and so the more blurred and soft the image will be. After you have taken the perfect shot, it is easy to take a picture. The focus must be retained on the brightest area. Do not shoot with a wide aperture – it will lead to a dull image. Focus, focus, focus. If you want to create the best images possible, it is important to use the camera AF system. Do not use a super-slow shutter speed. Use an aperture of f/4 or f/5.6 and focus on an area of light. Use the lights
